Once the skybox sees that successful test, it should power cycle the AFCI (pin 1 is 12v power) to bring it back to its default "good" state of pins 2 and 3 connected. In testing the skybox however, I found that pin 4 is always low. When the test is called by the skybox, this pin has as many as 4 pulses of about 12-13 millivots each.

This makes the SkyBox a unique product in the solar industry. The SkyBox also has a five port system allowing the import or export of 5kw of power at each of these locations (though not all at the same time). These ports hook up to the solar array, grid, house load, battery and generator. (Yes, it can support both backup options simultaneously.)
