Fin cooling systems in EVs and HEVs use cooling fins to enlarge the surface area for heat transfer. The battery cells attach the fins for heat transfer from the batteries to the fins and the surrounding air. While this system boosts the cooling effect thanks to the increased surface area, it also introduces added weight to the vehicle.

Compared to the traditional noncontact cooling system, the maximum temperature is reduced by 20.88 %, and the pressure drop is also 79.78 % lower. Furthermore, the volume of coolant ...
